Stop sign ignored

Car-bus collision in Saint-Chrysostome

Patrice Laflamme (translated by Suzanne J. Brown)

A stop sign was ignored by the driver of the bus that was transporting agricultural workers to Saint-Chrysostome is the reason a fatal accident occurred at the beginning of the evening July 4.

According to the Sûreté du Québec called to investigate the tragedy, the bus driver didn't stop his vehicle at Route 209 and Montée Mercier. Before crossing the intersection, the bus collided with a car driven by a young woman. The automobile was hit at the back, according to witnesses.

The motorist in the car, 28-year old Josiane Auclair, was dead on impact. She was alone in the car.

The bus had a dozen seasonal black employees on board returning home to Montreal. Eight of these passengers were transported to the Anna-Laberge Hospital in Chateauguay to take care of their minor injuries.

The driver of the vehicle, of Indian origin, works for a Montreal transportation firm. The SQ is currently investigating the accident and has already questioned the driver to know what happened.
