A tribute to the late Ewen McDougall

This tribute to the late Ewen J. McDougall was written by his sister, the late Kathleen (McDougall) Andrews of Victoria, B.C., shortly before her death in June, 1983.

Some men of note amassed great fortunes,
Some for first railways laid the rails;
While others with undaunted courage
Through trackless forest blazed new trails.

Some men were great and brilliant statesmen
And some flew first through lonesome sky;
Some in war were bravest leaders
And others climbed the mountains high.

His name will not go down in history
With men renowned in our fair land;
He will not share the fame and glory
Reserved for this illustrious band.

Did he lose out in life's long race?
Was he just an also ran?
Just one more successful farmer,
Just an ordinary man.

Ewen's life was never easy
As he travelled on his way;
From him the sun was often hidden
And the skies were cold and grey.

Yet though his days were very busy,
He still could find the time to smile
And for another with a burden
He still would walk the extra mile.

To sleepless nights he was no stranger,
But, asked about the night he'd had,
He'd asked the one who asked the question
And smile and say, "On, not too bad".

He was no man of fame or fortune,
This son and brother, husband, Dad,
Who though beset with pain and worry
Still thought his life was not too bad.

If men of fame had walked beside him,
Had shared each day the life he had
Could they have smiled and said like Ewen,
"My path through life is not too bad".

He wrote his quiet page of glory,
Left shining bright for all to scan,
The one who follows in his footsteps
Will be no ordinary man.
