Tribute to Rufus Fisher

by Esther Lang

As the old song goes, "There'll be love and laughter, and peace everafter."

You taught us songs, and rhymes, and verseto make each day go better. We had fun in any kind of weather. In our Family Orchestra, when I was young, you were the leader; and at the end, with roles reversed, I had to lead, but at age 85 you could still perform.

For a TV crew last fall, you played your fiddle at Hallerton hall. The sax, banjo, piano, guitar, and violin are silent as of today, but the whistling and humming are with us to stay. Your spirit will live on in the music I play.

You were just as talented with the plow. Everything was a challenge to you. You could fix anything and make it do! Your wit and wisdom were the key, of how to live successfully. At suppertime, at a quarter to six, we gathered around that old radio for only one reason, whether we were sugaring or having, whatever the season; to listen to a program that put music under our feet, and a new tune in our head so we couldn't sleep! Even the Shorthorns had to wait!

I loved my mother, Lily, your first wife, and I'm glad you brought Edith into my life; with all her talents and loving ways, she has brightened all our days. You even had a second crop of grandchildren. I can picture you playing with the wee ones in Heaven!

On my wedding day you walked beside me down the aisle. And today I followed you, and I knew you would want me to smile.

A long time ago, when I was teaching Sunday School, I asked my class, "How do you know Jesus loves you?" And I sang the simple answer, "For the Bible tells me so." Thank you everyone for singing this hymn as Dad left St. Luke's Anglican Church, Hemmingford, for the last time. Dad always requested a children's hymn.

Goodnight Dad, I'll miss you. I can hear Don Messer playing, "Smile Awhile/Till We Meet Again." God Bless you and keep you. With love today and forever.

P.S. To all you dear folk reading this; stop for a moment, and reminisce, and send me your stories, please, for my book of memories.
