Former H'don resident dies in Ontario

Dr. Lindon C. C. Parham, who grew up in Huntingdon, died recently in North Bay Ont. He is survived by his wife Susan, sons Corey and Christopher Robertson; by Phyllis Reeve, Dr. Parham's sister, and her family; and by his extended family in Quebec.

Dr. Parham was predeceased by his parents, Wilfrid Laurier Parham and Gladys Margery Parham, and by Howard and Jean Farley, the loving uncle and aunt who raised him from an early age in Huntingdon.

Dr. Parham was born in Fiji in 1941 and raised in the Montreal area. He went to North Bay in 1970 where for awhile he was the whole Psychology Department of the fledgling Nipissing University. (He held a BA degree from Sir George Williams University, and an MA and PhD from the University of Toronto.) An inspiring teacher, he soon established himself as a cultural force in the larger community.

Of all the arts, perhaps his greatest love was music. He was founding member of the North Bay Symphony Society, and even wrote and presented a 'joy of music' program series for CBC Radio.

There are two things his friends, colleagues and students will especially remember about Lin: his irrepressible, wry, irreverent wit; and his passionate, bone-deep, reverent love of beauty. There are two debts that those who knew him will never be able to repay; his ability to inspire a love of the arts and science; and his unhesitant, unquestioning generosity.

A memorial service was held in North Bay in early June.
